According to the Treatment Action Group's 2014 Report on Tuberculosis Research Funding Trends, the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases is the biggest funding agency for tuberculosis research among international organizations, including governmental, non-governmental agencies and the private sector. This presentation will describe global joint efforts combating TB, with an emphasis on NIAID/NIH research portfolio in TB clinical research and clinical trials. The outcomes of the most recent NIH TB study findings as well as future research priorities of TB and its comorbid conditions will also be discussed in this presentation.
